According to a brief discussion in the Medical Times (October, 1909)--Some physicians have attributed the corrosive action to calcium carbonate and to sulphuric acid. Fresh cement, however, does not contain calcium carbonate; and it is questioned whether slacked lime or even partly slacked lime will produce this effect, for masons working with lime mortar are seldom if ever attacked with cement makers itch. The quantity of sulphuric acid in cement is very small. Possibly the effect may be explained by mechanical friction between the skin and very fine but hard particles of cement. Briquette makers, observes Scientific American, are subject to a similar but less serious annoyance. Cement makers itch and ordinary itch have one symptom in common--intense itching, especially at night. The itching appears to be increased by the heat of the bed, and is also more annoying in...
