Excerpt: . . . CHAPTER IX. How to draw and paint a Coat of arms. purpose to be Whatmans drawing paper, moderately rough, a large sheet of which can be obtained for 25 cents, and cut up as needed; or if it be desired to paint on card, the best is London board. Be careful that neither paper, nor card has a glazed surface, or you will find that the colors will not lie evenly on it. The brushes needed are about six in number, ranging from the finest to medium size; the small ones had better be of sable; for the larger size, camels hair will answer the purpose. The colors required are as follows: orange vermilion, French blue, emerald green, Prussian blue, gamboge, crimson lake, madder, brown, burnt sienna, yellow ochre, neutral tint, sepia, Chinese white, slab of gold, ditto of silver (or, if preferred aluminium), And first as to the material on which it is proposed to paint the coat of arms. We have found the most suitable for the his chapter being intended more especially for the assistance of amateurs, is necessarily somewhat elementary in its nature. bottle of waterproof ink, a piece of India rubber and one of ink eraser, two yards of tracing paper, one hard and one soft pencil, a pointed agate burnisher. A drawing board about 17 inches by 21 inches will be needed, costing about a dollar, also a T square, long enough to reach across the board, one...
